Article Submission Guidelines:

When submitting your article to the UTLJ, please note the following guidelines:

- The UTLJ is a general law journal; we accept submissions on any topic. We particularly welcome articles of a theoretical, interdisciplinary, comparative or conceptually oriented nature. The UTLJ regularly publishes articles that study law from such perspectives as legal philosophy, law and economics, legal history, criminology, law and literature, and feminist analysis.
- Submissions are reviewed on an ongoing basis, and therefore can be made at any time.
- The UTLJ operates on a double-blind peer review process. The piece is send to two reviewers who do not know the identity of the author. The author is not informed of the identity of the reviewers.
- This peer review process ordinarily takes four to six weeks.
- The UTLJ has an exclusive submissions policy. If you submit to the UTLJ, you cannot submit your piece to any other journal for consideration.
- Our preferred length for articles is approximately 15,000-20,000 words including notes.
- Articles submitted to the UTLJ should be anonymized, to facilitate our blind review process. The document properties should be removed. The article should not include the author’s name or any acknowledgements. No “track changes” should remain in the document. Any footnotes referencing the author’s prior work in a way that might identify the author should be redacted.
- Please upload your submission to https://mc04.manuscriptcentral.com/utlj
- All correspondence should be addressed to the editor, David Dyzenhaus at david.dyzenhaus@utoronto.ca
- When formatting your citations, please follow the seventh edition of the McGill Guide. Please note that the seventh edition removes most periods from its citations formats. The format for page pinpoints is “at 2” (i.e. the page number, with “at” before it).
- Please note the following examples of the basic format for secondary sources (taken from the McGill Guide):
